What should I call it? I found this shape in my ultrasound at 19 weeks and found it interesting but it's not really a kick. She has a face that looks like my mom and grandma. My mom is a dark brown skin, my grandma is a light brown and my husband is white. So she has a face that's a mix of all 3. The profile view on the picture below is taken about a month ago. A: This is termed as Discordant Face Types in this paper. If your child has this face, the paper also suggests seeing if you have other children who are either also of the same birth order (first-born twin) or a next-born sibling. If you do have another child of the same birth order, then you should be aware that they have a one in three chance (50%) of sharing their blood group (ABO) with you. If your next-born sibling has the same face type and that same blood type is also shared with you, you are at one in two chance of conceiving a child with a similar face type. If you don't have either of these siblings, then the odds of twins 648931e174
