When the DxGammaPlayer is started, you must select an image or other image file (in case of a window) to be opened. The image is displayed normally, and the Gamma curve can be adjusted, window operations can be executed, and so on. If the Gamma or color setting is applied to the window instead of a particular picture, a second window with the current settings will be opened in the background, allowing you to make alterations to the settings, and the Gamma/color setting, using the Gamma Player. Helpful settings: The Gamma Player can capture the gamma settings of the screen: - If the PC has a switchable CRT/LCD/P-MOS LCD, you can use a hardware switch to select the active output. - If you have (or can install) a CRT monitor with a built-in horizontal/vertical switcher, you can use the
